About the British Music Society

Your part in BMS

Application Form

The British Music Society (BMS) was founded in 1979 to promote, preserve and celebrate British music both at home and abroad. The BMS is for everyone, whether young or old, amateur or professional. The society remains to encourage and renew international enthusiasm for much British music of the last 150 years or so which is still too often undeservedly neglected.

This aim is pursued through the dissemination of recordings and printed publications issued under the Society's own imprint, and the promotion of lecture-recital series and occasional concert performances for which the Society acts as sponsor. Society recordings are produced on three labels: the BMS main label and its subsidiary BMS Historic label, both available for general sale as well as to members (the latter at discounted rates); and the secondary Environs label, normally made available only to members.
